KIRBY BECOMES A JUNIOR CAMP COUNSELOR

Kirby loves summer camp every year. This year he was hoping to be a junior counselor. After three years of going, Kirby knows the routine and just how fun it is for all the kids. Last year, the other junior counselors were the age Kirby is now. They had even said Kirby should apply.

Kirby was so excited the day the letter came in offering a position as camp counselor. It was almost the end of the school year and Mama greeted Kirby at the door.

"Hi Kirby. How was school today?" Mama asked with a grin. "This came in the mail for you today." She finished.

"Thanks, Mama. It was good." Kirby replied as he ripped open the envelope, nearly ripping the letter in the process. "I got it, Mama! I got it!" Kirby yelled, "WAHOO!"

Mama giggled at Kirby's screamed and jumped for joy. She never doubted the outcome. Kirby was well liked by all the other counselors and staff every year. Plus, the letters of recommendation from Kirby's teachers were very good. Kirby always got good grades and was used to being part of a team. All the things employers look for in employees.

"Congratulations, Kirby! When do you go?" Mama asked still smiling.

Kirby read the letter over, "I need to be there July 5th to get camp ready. The other kids will arrive on July 7th and be there for two weeks. Then you and Papa can pick me up to come home on July 23rd. It says my pay is room and board, plus a stipend of $200 per week. Mama what's a stipend?" Kirby asked with a confused look on his face.

Mama thought for a moment before she answered. "Well, Kirby, because you're too young to have an actual job a junior counselor position is kind of like you are in training, so they pay you a stipend. It is a little money to pay you for your work, but not as much as when you're actually a staff person. Does that make sense?"

"Yes, Mama. I think so. I'm just happy I get to make money and still be at camp!" Kirby answered with a big smile on his face a twinkle in his eye. Kirby yelled to Mama, while running out of the kitchen. "I'm going to go make sure I have everything I'll need to take Mama."

Mama shook her head with a laugh as she told Kirby, "You have plenty of time. You don't leave for a few weeks!"

Kirby didn't hear Mama. The list of everything to take was already being written in Kirby's head. "Swimsuit, beach towel, shorts, t-shirts, hiking boots, tennis shoes, flip flops, ... I better write it down," Kirby thought with a pen and paper in hand.

"I can't wait to tell Papa and all my friends the news." Kirby thought with a smile.

DID YOU KNOW YOUR MONEY DANCES?

SO IT DOESN'T REALLY, BUT IT APPEARS TO.

The blue ribbon $100 bills contains thousands of micro lenses that can give the appearance that the Liberty Bell is dancing.
